TUESDAY, MARCH 22, 1836.

We would again call the attention of the new Council to the subject of the drains about the Town, and especially to the condition of the gully between the tan yard and the river. These discussion; but its fate is doubtful. are matters that should be efficiently and throughly attended to before the warm weather.

We see by the Charleston papers that some of the Banks in that city are receiving the notes of the Augusta and Savannah banks and also of the Merchants' Bank of this place.

Small Pox.

The absence of some members of the official report for p no case of small pox in town, and none that we have heard of nearer than nine miles. We learn however that the disease is spreadng in Marlborough District. We understand there are, at least, twenty new cases. There have been some deaths, but the numper we do not know.

The present is but one of the very numerous instances in which valuable lives are sacrificed to the credulity of men,-to the readiness with which they believe the professions of ignorant pretenders to a knowledge of medicine and the treatment of disease. We understand that one of the first who took the small pox in Marlberough, called to his relief a steam doctor, who forthwith went to work upon him, pronouncing the disease to be measles. When he saw the abundant crop of pustules which appeared on the skin, this was only the effect of his remedies, which drove out the measles better than it ever was, or could has arrived at Washington. be done by any regular physician.

Now the most ignorant negro in Marlborough District, who is not a very idiot, might be taught in less than a week, or less than an hour even, in the office of a physician, the difference between measles and small pox so plainly that he could not, after the eruption, mistake the one for the other. If a physician of any weight of character had been called to this case, he would not only have seen what the disease was, before there was any danger of infection from it. but would also have recommended the proper measures to prevent its spread, and by of the United States. his influence would have procured them to be adopted.

mear Columbus in Georgia; and so very cautious were the people in that neighborhood that they stationed a guard around the house in which he was, to prevent the return home of the physicians who attended him, and the intercourse of others with him who might spread the infection. And they also burnt all the apparel which he had burning the house in which he had been confined. Their example is worthy of imitation in every particular except that of confining the physicians.

Stage Accident. Drunken Driver .- A few nights ago, as the Editor of this paper, with three other passengers, were travelling in the mail coach from Camden to Cheraw, the driver in a state of intoxication fell from the box. Before this was discovered by any of us in the stage, the horses set off at full speed, for a short distance, when one of the wheels striking a tree, turned over the stage. Such was the violence of the shock, that the harness of the lead horses and the tongue of the carriage were broken, which prevented the stage being dragged farther, and saved the passengers from any severe injury.

Two of the passengers who went back a distance of more than two miles to the last house which we had passed, for the purpose of procuring light, found the driver two or three hundred yards from the place where the accident occurred, lying as he had fallen. in the mud. They roused him, and finding that he was not hurt, and that he could render them no assistance, they left him till their return, when they brought him along stag. gering drunk in a cart which they had procured to transport the baggage to a place of security and a shelter from the rain, which was falling upon us without intermission.

· If contractors for carrying the mail by stage were subjected to heavy penalties, every time any driver in their employ was found intoxicated, whether an accident occurred or not, they would be more careful to employ only "temperance" men as drivers; and the lives of passengers would not be so often endangered.

We, on the morning of the same day found a newspaper bag lying on the road, which seemed to have dropped from the stage the night before.

The enterprizing and efficient contractor who owns this line will, we hope, take steps to prevent the recurrence of such accidents.

> Mr. Webster has not engaged in the debate in the Senate on the subject of abolition. Abolition Memorial.-March 1.

Mr. WEBSTER expressed shortly his judgment as to the proper course to be taken with these petitions. He thought they ought to be received, referred, and considered. That was what was usually done with petitions on other subjects, and what had been uniformly done, heretofore, with petitions on this subject also.

Those who believed they had an undoubted right to petition, and that Congress had undoubted constitutional thority over the were found about twenty two hundred dolsubjects to which their petitions related, would not be satisfied with a refusal to receive the petitions, nor with a formal reception of them, followed by an immediate vote rejecting their prayer. In parliamentary (Kentucky,) says, alluding to the Charlesforms there was some difference between these two modes of proceeding, but it would was amended, by striking out the provision be considered as little else than a diference in reserving to the State the right to purchase mere form. He thought the question must, at the Rail Road and all appertaining thereto, at sometime, be met, considered, and discussed. In this matter, as in others, Congress doubtless concurred in the amendment of must stand on its reasons. It was in vain to attempt to shut the door against petitions, and expect in that way to avoid discussion. On the presentment of the first of these petitions, he had been of opinion that it ought to be referred to the proper committee. He was of that opinion still. The subject could not be stifled. It must be discussed, and he wished it should be discussed calmly, dispassionately, and fully, in all its branches and all its bearings. To reject the prayer of a petition at once, without reference or consideration, was not respectful; and in this case nothing could be possibly gained by going out of the usual course of respectful onsideration.

By holding Masters and their slaves alike, as belivers bretheren & beloved. 2. By enjoining on each the duties proper toward the other. 3. By grounding their obligations for the fulfilment of these duties as of all others on their relations to God. Masters could never have had their duties enforced by the consideration, "your Master also in heaven," if the being a Master involved in itself any thing immoral.

"Our Missionaries inculcate the duties of servants to their Masters as we find those duties stated in the Scriptures. They induce the performance of them as indispensably important. We hold that a Christian slave must be submissive faithful and obedient, for reasons of the same authority with those which obligate husbands, wives fathers, mothers, sisters, to fulfil the duties of these relations. We would employ no one in the work who might hesitate to teach thus; nor can such a one be found in the whole number of the preachers of this Conference."
